

Tiburon man rescued after two days in Montana wilderness

Avid trail runner went off alone during trip with brother-in-law, broke his leg and survived temperatures in 30s in just his shorts

By MATTHEW HOSE
 mhose@thearknewspaper.com

A Tiburon man who went missing in backcountry Montana last week was found alive after breaking his leg and enduring two nights of nearly freezing temperatures with few supplies.

George Brown, a 68-year-old Cibrian Drive resident, was rescued from the Bob Marshall Wilderness Aug. 7 after he spent several hours shuffling his way back to a trail while he had two broken bones in his lower left leg.

He was airlifted to a hospital in Great Falls, Mont., where he was treated for severe dehydration, muscle breakdown and a kidney injury, along with the broken tibia and fibula.

Brown, a retired accountant who's lived in

See RESCUED, PAGE 20

Tiburon resident George Brown, 68, was airlifted to a hospital in Great Falls, Mont., after he was rescued Aug. 7 from the Bob Marshall Wilderness area in backcountry Montana. Brown, seen here with his wife, Cindy, endured two nights of nearly freezing temperatures after he got lost during an 8-mile run in the mountains and broke his leg trying to get back to the trail.

VIA CINDY BROWN

Ready to ride

Creator of Blackie statue returns to freshen up local icon

By DEIRDRE McCROHAN
 dmccrohan@thearknewspaper.com

The statue of Blackie the horse that stands in Blackie's Pasture wasn't designed for riding, but visitors to the Tiburon park often have a hard time resisting the temptation to sidle up and throw a leg over to pose for a selfie.

After 23 years of carrying passersby on his deeply swayed back, the local icon was showing some cracks.

Sculptor Albert Guibara, who created the statue,

See BLACKIE, PAGE 20

PETEE STEIN

Sculptor Albert Guibara created the Blackie-the-horse statue that stands in Blackie's Pasture.

ELLIOT KARLAN / FOR THE ARK

election 2018

All three Tiburon council incumbents to retain their seats

No challengers emerge before Aug. 10 filing deadline; other local boards appear to have uncontested races

By DEIRDRE McCROHAN
 dmccrohan@thearknewspaper.com

The three incumbents up for re-election on the Tiburon Town Council will likely retain their seats by default, as no challengers declared their candidacy ahead of the Aug. 10 filing deadline.

The council race is one of a slew of local board races that are set to be uncontested in the Nov. 6 election; though several boards are poised to see turnover as incumbents step down, just three of the 10 other boards with seats up for

See ELECTION, PAGE 19

Marin County to require neighbor notification for short-term rentals

By EMILY LAVIN
 elavin@thearknewspaper.com

Strawberry residents who list their properties on sites such as Airbnb or VRBO will now be required to let neighbors know the property is being used as a short-term rental — and those neighbors will have access to a new hotline they can use to lodge complaints.

Under an ordinance unanimously approved Aug. 7 by the Marin Board of Supervisors, short-term-rental hosts in unincorporated Marin — which on the greater

See RENTALS, PAGE 18

YOUR HOME IS YOUR MOST VALUABLE ASSET.
 SO IS YOUR REPRESENTATION.

Sotheby's
 INTERNATIONAL REALTY